SECTION 1. HISTORICAL BACKGROUND OF JICA

1. Past Developments in International Cooperation

The Japan International Cooperation Agency (JICA) was established by merging the Overseas Technical Cooperation Agency, which had been engaged in technical cooperation on a governmental basis, and the Japan Emigration Service, which had performed emigration services. It has incorporated also part of the function of the Japan Overseas Development Corporation and new functions. The history of Japan's international cooperation before the establishment of the JICA is outlined below.

(1) History of Technical Cooperation

Japan's technical cooperation on a governmental basis started in 1954 when it participated in the Colombo Plan, and the Asia Kyokai (Society for Economic Cooperation in Asia) was commissioned by the Government to take charge of the cooperation. Later, with the expansion of the geographical coverage of Japan's technical cooperation and a diversification of its fields of cooperation, the Sociedad Latino-America, the Committee for the Development of the Lower Mekong Basin in Japan and the Mekong Committee in Japan later joined, sharing in Japan's technical cooperation in their respective fields. However, as a result of increasing demands for Japan's assistance as well as of the recognition in Japan of the importance of technical cooperation in its diplomacy the need for setting up a system to extend technical cooperation could be rendered in a more comprehensive and efficient manner has come to be voiced strongly in Government and private circles.

In response to these domestic and international calls, the Overseas Technical Cooperation Agency was established on June 30, 1962 under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. With the establishment of this organization, the Asia Kyokai and the Mekong Committee in Japan were dissolved, transferring their functions to the Overseas Technical Cooperation Agency. With regard to the Sociedad Latino-America and the Committee for the Development of the Lower Mekong Basin in Japan, only their commissioned functions were taken over by the Overseas Technical Cooperation Agency.

With the high growth of the Japanese economy and an upgrading of Japan's international position, the Overseas Technical Cooperation Agency later strived to expand and diversify its work as well as improve its quality and carried out technical cooperation efficiently. The initial work of the Overseas Technical Cooperation Agency included four sectors -- that is, receiving of trainees, dispatch of experts, running of overseas technical cooperation center and conduct of development surveys. Later, supply of machinery and equipment, dispatch of Japan Overseas Cooperation Volunteers, medical cooperation, cooperation in agricultural development, and technical cooperation in the development of primary products were added. In addition, a variety of additional measures were implemented for qualitative upgrading of the work, such as the establishment of international training centers, establishment of overseas offices, improvement of a system for the dispatch of experts, and diversification of development survey. With the advent of the 1970's, a major turning point emerged for Japan's technical cooperation to developing countries, and the recommendation made to the Government by the technical cooperation panel of the Council for Economic Cooperation to Foreign Countries in 1971 pointed out in part: "Technical cooperation should be stepped up in the form of fund cooperation as a mainstay for cooperation in development to foreign countries -- particularly in the form of economic cooperation, integrating the offer of grant, super-soft loans. For the accomplishment of this purpose, it is essential that all existing organizations for development cooperation to foreign countries be re-examined to meet new requirements of the times."

(2) History of Emigration Services

Emigration services were resumed in 1952 for the first time in the postwar years. To step up the resumed emigration services, the Government established the Federation of Japan Overseas Associations as the central organ of the Overseas Associations then existing in Prefectures. On the other hands, under a law, the Japan Emigration Promotion Co., Ltd. was established in order to carry out work comprising the extension of loans business to the emigrants. However, duplication in work of the two organizations and the multiplicity of administrative organs gave rise to a variety of troubles in the work related to the emigration. In 1961, the Council for Overseas Emigration submitted a recommendation: "organizations reliant on Government subsidies or funds should be amalgamated into a new public administrative to rationalize the emigration work." In line with this recommendation, the Japan Emigration Service was established under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs on July 15, 1963. The Federation of Japan Overseas Associations and the Japan Emigration Promotion

Co., Ltd. were dissolved, and their foreign chapters and branches were taken over by the Japan Emigration Service. In Japan, it incorporated the Overseas Emigrants Training Center as its subsidiary organization.

The Japan Emigration Service established a local branch office in each Prefecture in 1964. It took over the Emigration Service Offices in Kobe and Yokohama from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and redesignated them as Emigration Centers. Thus, the Japan Emigration Service developed into an integrated administrative organization for emigration both in name and reality both at home and abroad. Later, it took charge of emigration services in Okinawa and other places and established a new office for the resumption of emigration to Canada. In 1971, the Kobe and Yokohama Emigration Service Offices were amalgamated into one organization and redesignated as an Overseas Emigration Center, and its 47 local offices were consolidated into 12 branches in 1973 in line with a policy of organizational rationalization.

In the meantime, the Japan Emigration Service earnestly strived for improvement of its services and took measures, such as strengthening of pre-emigration training, increased aid to settlers, improvement of the environment for settlements, improvement of conditions for land sales and improvement of loan conditions.

As regards overseas emigration, however, in response to major changes in and out of the country, a need for new concept, new targets and measures were keenly felt. Particularly in respect to the relation between emigration and economic and technical cooperation, it was felt that an enlargement of economic cooperation to the countries which are friendly for Japanese immigrants, have little racial prejudice and have rich resources would have very favorable effect on Japanese emigrants to those countries. It was also felt that overseas emigration would develop into development cooperation to the receiving countries and have the same effects as economic cooperation.

(3) History of Foreign Trade Development

The Japan Overseas Development Corporation was established in February 1960 to promote industrial development in developing countries and Japan's trade with them.

Its work comprised (1) extension of funds (rationalization funds) necessary for the construction by developers of roads, public piers, joint facilities and others in connection with the production of primary commodities in developing countries, (2) extension to Japanese enterprises of funds necessary for pilot projects to be undertaken prior to full-scale projects in developing areas, (3) extension to smaller Japanese businesses of funds for overseas investment, and

(4) advance of funds for the import of primary products. Of these categories, it was decided that the business associated with rationalization facilities and pilot projects would be taken over by the Japan International Cooperation Agency as it was thought that it would be more effective to integrate them with technical cooperation to be extended on a governmental basis.

2. Establishment and Objective of JICA

Against the background elucidated in the foregoing, the Japan International Cooperation Agency Law which was designed to contribute to promote international cooperation and the socioeconomic development of developing countries was enacted and promulgated as Law No. 62 at the 72nd National Diet on May 31, 1974, and the Japan International Cooperation Agency was established on August 1, 1974. As elucidated earlier, JICA took over the work of the Overseas Technical Cooperation Agency, Japan Emigration Service and part of the work of the Japan Overseas Development Corporation and also incorporated the work which had not been carried out by the then existing agencies. In broad terms, the work of JICA might be described as comprising the following pillars.

The first is to extend technical cooperation to developing areas on a governmental basis. The second is to carry out the work necessary for the promotion of the activities of the Japan Overseas Cooperation Volunteers. The third is to supply funds necessary for the improvement of facilities related to the social development, the development of their agriculture and forestry, mining and manufacturing funds necessary for pilot projects and to offer technology. The fourth is to provide services necessary for smooth emigration to Central and South America and other areas. The fifth is to train and recruit qualified personnel for technical cooperation.

On April 28, 1978, the Law for Partial Revision of the Japan International Cooperation Agency Law (Law No. 35 of 1978) was put into effect. Under this law, it was decided to provide new services for the implementation of Capital Grant Assistance to developing areas.

As JICA carries out these mutually related lines of work in an integrated manner, the comprehensive and efficient management of international cooperation by the Government is expected to be further stepped up both at home and abroad.

JICA is an institution which carries out important work for international cooperation. In the meantime, the Japan Foundation, Overseas Economic Cooperation Fund and Export-Import Bank of Japan, as they have done in the past, continue to offer services in their respective fields for international cooperation. In this context, it might be said that JICA was established to supplement the work left under by the past system of international cooperation.

SECTION 2. BUSINESS

The Agency consistently carries out the work related to international cooperation in and out the country in accordance with the Japan International Cooperation Agency Law (see Appendices 4) under the supervision mainly of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and partly of the Ministry of Agriculture, Forestry and Fisheries and the Ministry of International Trade and Industry. The Agency tries to obtain extensive cooperation from governmental organs, local autonomous bodies and private enterprises in Japan, and to keep in close contact with the governments of developing countries and international organizations, to maintain smooth and efficient operation.

The following describes the details of operation carried out by the Agency.

1. Government-sponsored Technical Cooperation

(1) Training Program for Overseas Participants

This program is intended to provide training for participants from developing countries who are invited by the Japanese Government to study technology in various fields. The acquiring of new technical knowledge, or refreshers, training, will contribute to economic and social development in the developing countries, and at the same time introduce Japanese industry and culture while promoting friendly relationships. The expenses for training of these participants are borne, as a rule, by the Japanese Government. The training system is divided into group training, for which the participants are invited from various countries to study according to pre-arranged programs, and individual training program designed according to the requests of the countries which dispatch the participants. Though the qualifications required of participants differ according to training course, most of the participants selected are middle-level management personnel from developing countries who will assume key roles in future economic and social development of their respective countries.

The participants are classified as participants in seminars, observers, researchers, and engineers, and they study at the training institute of the Agency, government research organizations, universities and training centers operated by private enterprises.

The Agency is engaged in planning and general management of the training programs and at the same time, establishes and operates international training centers. And, also, Japanese language courses and follow-up activities for participants who have completed the training programs are provided as a part of the training program.

(2) Expert Dispatch Program

JICA dispatches Japanese experts to developing countries, or to international organizations, to assist for example in planning, research, guidance, promotion and recommendation for development programs at the government organizations, research institutes, schools, training centers etc. The Japanese Government generally bears the expenses involved. The JICA selects experts through recommendation by the appropriate governmental organizations, or selects itself from among applicants whose names are registered with the Agency. Prior to their dispatch they are given orientation and training on the conditions of respective overseas countries, languages, and techniques.

The Agency maintains close contact with the persons who are dispatched, in order to help them devote themselves to their services.

(3) Equipment Supply Program

In order to foster development more effectively, JICA supplies the equipment necessary for the activities of ex-trainees, dispatched experts, and Japan Overseas Cooperation Volunteers, in developing countries which have insufficient supply of equipment and facilities. It is appreciated as an assistance in a combination of men and material by developing countries. The equipment supplied includes farming machinery, machine tools, fishing gears, electronic microscopes, communications equipment, broadcasting equipment.

(4) Technical Cooperation Center Program

Centers are established on the basis of agreements between the respective governments of the recipient countries and Japan. Engineers, machines, and equipment are supplied by Japan and the country receiving assistance offers sites and buildings as required for training, demonstration and study of techniques. The Technical Cooperation Center trains local engineers and skilled workers directly and uses measures and methods appropriate to the local environment and conditions. Centers can be extremely useful effect as they offer also technical demonstration.

(5) Development Survey Program

Survey teams are dispatched upon the request of developing countries for development projects such as establishment of industrial infrastructure, production increase and comprehensive regional development which play an important role in the economic growth of the developing country. The development survey programs range widely from simple surveys of present conditions, to fine feasibility survey, preparation of detailed design and specification of projects. The subject to be surveyed also ranges from a development project in a specified field of a country, to a comprehensive regional development project covering several fields and many countries; such as the Lower Mekong Basin Development Program, the Asian Highway plan and the wide area communication network construction plan. Recent surveys have become large-scale and long-term and high precision surveys backed up by financial cooperation are being requested. JICA obtains extensive cooperations from governmental organizations and private consultation firms for the dispatch of survey teams. The results of surveys are reported to the recipient governments.

Development surveys often require financial cooperation, therefore, closer relations with financial cooperation organizations, including the investment and financing by JICA should be emphasized.

(6) Agriculture and Forestry Cooperation Program

Previously stress had been placed on rice cultivation projects, including survey, designing and farm-managing systems for model development projects and guidance for agricultural extension. Since 1967, the cooperation in this field has been expanded to include rural development projects designed to raise and stabilize large scale agricultural production, agricultural cooperation aimed at agricultural research and education, and agriculture training center projects.

With the start of JICA, the survey, designing and technical guidance related to forestry development of developing countries has been expanded on top of the previously established forestry technical cooperation.

In the field of fishery, development technique cooperation, basic survey on development projects and survey on marine resources are being implemented in addition to the fishery education and cooperation on research and development.

Efficient promotion of the agriculture and forestry cooperation is expected through closer linkage with the investment and financing of the agriculture and forestry development cooperation which is described later.

(7) Medical Cooperation Program

This is intended to provide medical assistance to developing countries which are plagued by epidemics and diseases through the training of medical workers, prevention and study of tropical diseases, and the expansion of medical facilities.

The previous medical cooperation which was of a small scale has been expanded since 1966, to provide large-scale assistance to hospitals, medical research institutes, and medical universities, through dispatch of physicians, nurses, technicians and supply of machines and equipment.

(8) Mining and Manufacturing Cooperation Program

This is designed to perform feasibility studies, detailed designs, etc., related to mining and manufacturing development, and basic surveys related to the geological features and mineral deposits in prospective areas in view of the importance of resources development for economic development of developing countries. It is expected that the mining and manufacturing development like in the case of agriculture and forestry, will be efficiently carried out when it is combined with investment and financing.

(9) Other Technical Cooperation

In addition to the above, the Agency is providing services related to (a) procurement of ships, equipment and materials required by the Southeast Asian Fisheries Development Center, (b) technical cooperation offered by the United Nations, related organs and other international organizations and (c) recommendation of experts and survey teams for programs initiated by the governments of developing countries, (d) surveys on development projects and basic surveys on the development of resources in developing countries as commissioned by the Ministry of International Trade and Industry.

2. Promotion of Capital Grant Assistance

This is designed to step up the offer of Capital Grant Assistance to developing countries on the basis of treaties and other international commitments.

Capital Grant Assistance is an assistance which is extended to developing countries without imposing any obligations to reimburse the money on the basis of treaties and other international commitments. This type of aid includes general grant aid, grant aid for fisheries, grant aid for food, aid for the increase of food production and others. Of these, the services which are rendered by JICA is related to general grant aid and grant aid for fisheries, and they are closely tied in with technical cooperation.

Incidentally, general grant aid is offered for improvement of facilities at technical cooperation centers, hospitals, schools, research institutes and other institutions. In the aid for fisheries, the funds necessary for the improvement of facilities, such as fishery training facilities and fishery training ships, are offered. The facilities closely related to technical cooperation are those which are requested to extend technical cooperation such as training centers, or those are improved according to a basic design drawn by a dispatched survey team, or those where the technologies which are to be turned over with a dispatch of experts or an acceptance of participants will be put to effective use.

With respect to the promotional work, the Japan International Cooperation Agency Law defined them as "surveys, good-offices, liaison and other business necessary for the conclusion of contracts, related to the Capital Grant Assistance." In concrete terms, they are (1) liaison between the recipient country and private businesses, consultations, good-offices and studies on the specifications for facilities and others to be offered, screening of the contract and other matters in respect to the conclusion of the contract between the recipient country and private businesses; and (2) liaison between the recipient country and Japanese banks, consultations, good-offices studies on arrangements with the banks in respect to the arrangements with the banks. Moreover, surveys for the speed up of disbursement of grant aid (on-the-spot surveys, surveys on work progress, etc.) are also carried out.

Viewed from the framework of Capital Grant Assistance, international commitments and payments are made by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in the offer of grant aid. By assuring a smooth tie-in of the various lines of business ranging from international commitment to payment, however, JICA offers services for the promotion of what is known as Capital Grant Assistance in order to work for an effective implementation of grant aid and for an effective realization of the aid objectives.

3. Overseas Cooperation Activities of Japanese Volunteers

The Japan Overseas Cooperation Volunteers work, in unity with the local people, for cooperation in the socioeconomic development of developing countries in Asia, Africa, the Middle East, Central and South America and the South Pacific. The Government promotes and assists the overseas activities of the youths who voluntarily participate in the work.

Volunteers are dispatched in response to the request of a developing country. Public announcement on service of Japan Overseas Cooperation Volunteers and their recruitment are placed under the jurisdiction of the Japan Overseas Cooperation Volunteers Office in cooperation with each prefectural government. Training before their dispatch abroad, support during their two-year term of service and guidance are provided by the said Office and its resident staff in the receiving countries.

The Volunteers live and work together with the local people and through their technologies and skills contribute toward nation-building of developing countries. The Volunteers are supported by the Japanese Government in respect to their living and other expenses at their place of assignment but do not receive what may be regarded as a remuneration for their services. They work as volunteers, living to life of local people as also as possible, speaking the local language, understanding their feelings, respecting their rules and help local people in their self-help endeavors.

In disseminating information about the Volunteers in Japan and promoting the Japanese people's understanding of them the cooperation and collaboration with local governments, nongovernmental youth organizations, information media, Japan Overseas Cooperation Volunteers Alumni Club, Supporting Organization for Japan Overseas Cooperation Volunteers and other organizations are amplified, and efforts are made to maintain their cooperation.

Since the experiences gained in their cooperation is of utmost importance for enhancing public opinion on international cooperation, measures are taken to help them build themselves up as human beings after their return to Japan and fulfil the aforementioned functions.

4. Cooperation in Social Development, Agricultural and Forestry Development, and Mining and Manufacturing Development

This is the cooperation in supplying funds necessary for social development, including culture, transportation, communications, health and living environment, and for the improvement of related facilities which will be required for the development of agriculture, forestry, mining and manufacturing.

The first is the work to supply funds to projects which find it difficult to obtain funds from the Overseas Economic Cooperation Fund and the Export-Import Bank of Japan.

This work comprises (a) the loaning of funds or providing surety for liabilities incurred in connection with the improvement of facilities which are related to various developmental projects and contribute to construction and improvement of related facilities which become necessary for the development of surrounding areas for example, construction of feeder roads, improvement of green zones, installation of waterworks and sewerage which becomes necessary in connection with the construction of public buildings; (b) the loaning of funds, providing of surety for liabilities incurred in connection with borrowing of funds or makes investments to supply funds required for experimental projects among development projects, which cannot be completed or whose management stabilization is difficult unless they are carried out in combination with technical renovation or development. These funds are supplied with extremely soft terms.

The second is the work which JICA carried out to construct and improve facilities which contribute to the development of these regions at the request of the governments of developing countries based on international commitments. In concrete terms, this includes clearing and improvement of farm lands, improvement of foundation for agricultural and forestry production, afforestation, preparation of sites for mining and manufacturing facilities, improvement of infrastructure for mining and industrial production, improvement of industrial pollution control facilities and improvement of other public facilities. Such projects can be carried out with the financial cooperation from Japan. These projects are implemented with the approval of the recipient government only when there is no other organization in that country or Japan to implement them.

The third is the work which JICA undertakes in the survey and provision of technical guidance which is necessary for its project, aiming at combination of funds and techniques.

The fourth work of JICA is the providing of technical guidance necessary for the projects concerned without hindering its proper work when such technical guidance is required by private developmental projects, particularly in the field of agriculture and forestry.

5. Emigration Services

(1) Research and Dissemination of Knowledge Related to Emigration

The Agency analyzes preferences of destination of emigration candidates collect information on laws, political, economic and social situation of the countries they want to emigrate to including suitable areas for settlements, and conducts market research of agricultural produce.

(3) Lectures and Training for Emigrants

The training courses are organized for the emigrants for training in occupational skills, foreign languages as well as for their physical and mental training to foster their adaptability to the new settlements.

The training is divided into (a) courses for emigrants before leaving Japan and (b) courses in Japan for children of emigrants already settled overseas.

The training courses for pre-departure emigrants include instruction for agricultural emigrants, emigration trainees for South America, agricultural emigration trainees for Canada, industrial emigrants, and female emigrants and curricula are determined in accordance with actual conditions of accepting countries and the prospective emigrants learn the actual conditions there, techniques and languages at various training centers for emigration.

The Agency also adopts the system to invite children of the emigrants from the local settlements to Japan to learn the latest technology and knowledge, overseas for general education, academic study, and practical technical study at the expense of the Agency. This technical training has been conducted since 1971.

(4) Payment of Travel Expenses and Provision of Accommodations, Escort and Assistance for Emigrants at Time of Departure

JICA provides accommodations (at Emigration Center and Okinawa Branch) for emigrants and assists emigrants to complete the necessary procedures before departure. To ensure safe arrival of the emigrants at airports of the accepting countries, JICA provides to escort until they reach their destination.

(5) Consultation and Guidance for Emigrants Concerning Business, Occupation and Life in General in Accepting Countries

JICA offers various services for the emigrants who will be confronted with many problems in establishing their residence in the accepting countries. For emigrants who will be engaged in farming, JICA provides services such as information on improvement of farm management, marketing of farm produce, purchase of necessary materials and equipment, good-offices. JICA also provides education and guidance concerning the construction and management of test farms, farm management, market research, conditions of employed farmers, lease of common-use equipment, organization of agricultural cooperative and self-governing associations.

(6) Arrangement of Welfare Facilities and Other Assistance for Emigrants

JICA provides welfare services for emigrants which supplement the services of the accepting countries. The services include (a) construction of clinics at major settlements, commission of physicians and traveling clinics for medical care of emigrants dispersed in remote areas, (b) construction of primary and junior high schools and dormitories (mainly for districts with insufficient education facilities), preparation of school buses, subsidy to teachers and supply of scholarship funds, and (c) distribution of books and movie films, and mobile classrooms to help emigrants improve their living conditions, and assistance in the construction of public halls for the emigrants.

(7) Acquisition, Readjustment, Custody and Transfer of Land in Settlements and Good-offices

JICA provides services on the acquisition, readjustment, custody and transfer of land in the settlements with a fund from the Japanese Government, according to the development program or the farm land reform system of the accepting countries, taking into consideration the requests, adaptability and financial situation of the emigrants in order to facilitate emigration and settlement. These services include, (a) investigation of natural, social and economic conditions of the settlements and acquisition of lands, (b) planning of settlement construction, including utilization and readjustment of land, standard farm management plans, public facilities plans and financial plans, (c) construction of settlements, custody and transfer of land to the emigrants in accordance with the enterprise program and progress of emigration into the settlements, (d) transfer of land to enterprises concerned with promotion of farming by the emigrants, and (e) acquisition of settlement lands for employed farmers to become owner farmers.

(8) Loaning of Funds for Emigrants and Emigrants' Organizations, Guarantee of Debts of Emigrants and Investments

Emigrants who want to start a project at the settlements do not have close relation with local financing organizations. For this reason, the Agency loans necessary funds to establish their businesses and this service greatly contributes to the stabilization of the emigrants. Loan funds are available from Government contribution for agriculture, smaller industry and rehabilitation. JICA will make capital investments in processing, storing and transportation of agricultural produce, forestry and marine products which will contribute to development of the settlements.

(9) Loaning and Investment of Funds for Those (Other than Emigrants and Emigrants' Organizations) who Contribute to Stabilization of Emigrant Settlements

It has been considered important to enhance on-the-spot support, such as assistance and guidance, which are necessary to help emigrants adapt themselves quickly to their new environment. The Agency provides loans and investment capital for enterprises which directly contribute to the development of the settlements, such as enterprises which are engaged in processing, storing and transportation of agricultural, forestry and marine products which are supplied by the emigrants and for enterprises which contribute directly to the promotion of employment of the emigrants.

6. Training and Recruiting of Qualified Persons for Technical Cooperation

There are many highly talented, technically trained persons in Japan. However, suitable candidates for technical cooperation service are hard to find and cannot be smoothly recruited particularly from private firms due to the social environment and employment systems in Japan. Therefore, JICA relies mostly on public service personnel for recruitment of experts. To break this bottleneck as much as possible, JICA has a candidate registration system and experts corps system. A system to return experts to their mother organization has been adopted to facilitate smooth recruiting. For qualitative improvement of the experts, JICA presently operates preliminary seminars and language and technical training courses. JICA also operates training programs for candidate to be dispatched in the future.
