3. MICROCOMPUTER SYSTEM

All computers, whether large or small, basically operate on the same fundamental principles. The hardware and software of a mainframe computer and a microcomputer have the same components and fulfill the basic functions necessary to any computer system.

The computer is seen as a powerful tool that can enable us to expand the horizons of our knowledge. It allows processing of large volume of data or complex pattern of information that would otherwise be difficult to organize and understand. Moreover, it allows for an easy manipulation of data.

There are two major components of a microcomputer: the hardware and the software. These two components complement each other in order to fulfill their basic function.

A microcomputer hardware is made up of several components based on the functions they perform in the system and how they interact with the other components.

The principal elements of a computer system are:

- Central Processing Unit (CPU)
- Main Memory (RAM)
- Secondary Storage Devices (disk, drives, magnetic tapes, etc.)
- Input/Output Devices (monitors, printers, etc.)

The CPU does the actual computing. It is capable of simple arithmetic and logical operations, such as addition and data comparison, that are executed at exceedingly high speed. The power of a computer directly stems from the speed and accuracy with which the CPU can carry out computations and move information around. The main memory of the computer is usually referred to as Random Access Memory or RAM. This part of the computer contains the programs and information that are currently being processed by the CPU. Secondary storage device, such as magnetic disk, is capable of holding large amount of data. Programs and data are normally stored on these secondary devices and could be retrieved when needed. They are then loaded into the RAM and executed. The results of the processing can then be written into the secondary storage device or sent to an output device such as the monitor or printer. Peripheral devices or Input/Output (I/O) devices allow the user to put data into a computer or receive output from a computer. A terminal is a peripheral that contains both a keyboard for input and a monitor for output. Other peripherals include printers and plotters.

The diagram below presents the basic hardware component of a microcomputer system.

Printer
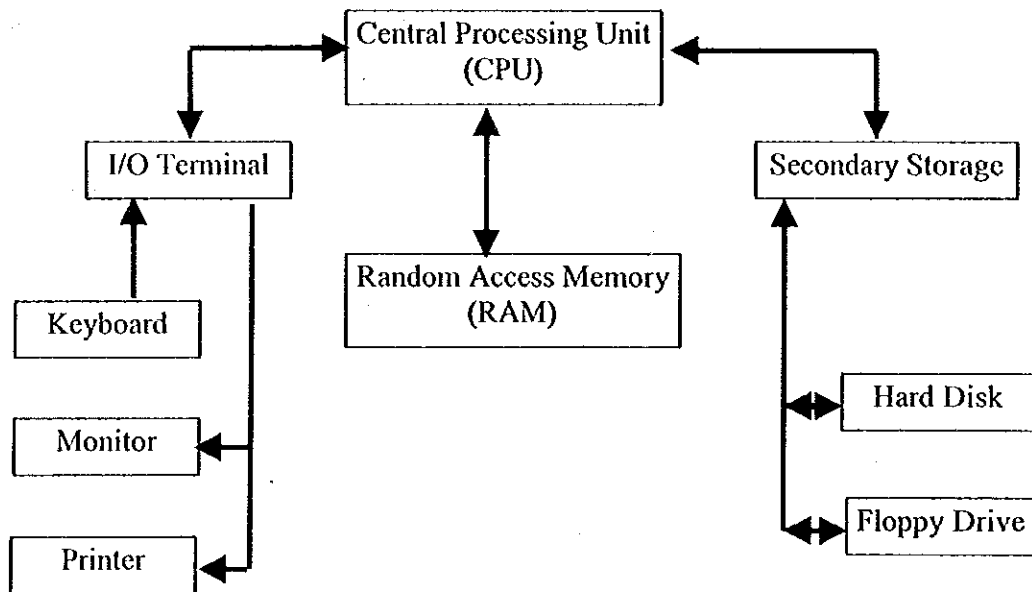

Floppy Drive is the most common type secondary storage used in personal computer today. It acts as an external drive from which the users insert the floppy disk to store and retrieve information. The floppy disk comes in three sizes: 3.5 inches, 5.25 inches and 8 inches. It is characterized by thin circular plastic sheets coated with iron oxide so that magnetic patterns recorded on it can be retained. The surface is similar to a magnetic tape used to record music. The 5.25 inches diskette is contained in a square cardboard envelope in which it spins. The 3.5 inches diskette is contained in a hard plastic case with a metal shutter that protects the magnetic media. A floppy disk can store from 80 kilobytes to 1.44 megabytes of data. Floppy disk system is slower and has less storage capacity than hard disk system, but its lower cost makes it a popular choice for personal computer users.

Hard disk is made of magnetic metal, and can either be removable or non-removable. The most common type of hard disk that is found in personal computer today is non-removable. This disk typically holds from 10 megabytes to 3.2 gigabytes of information. Each megabyte is equivalent to 1,048,576 characters of information, or roughly 1,800 single-spaced typewritten pages; hence, this is a very efficient way to store large volume of information.

Keyboard is an external device that acts as a primary interface between the human operator and the computer. The keyboard has 3 basic components: the typewriter keyboard which is composed of alphabet characters; the calculator pad which is composed of numeric characters; and the function keys which serve as special macro key for various software.

Monitor is the screen or video display peripheral and serves as the main output device on a personal computer. It is used to display text and graphics information and is available in a variety of sizes and types. Monitors can be divided into two broad groups: those designed to display text information; and those designed to display graphics information, such as charts or picture. Within the graphics group, there are color or monochrome (single color) displays. A high quality graphic color monitor is capable of showing high-resolution pattern and is recommended for application in MS-Window, Excel, or AutoCAD.

Printer is another common peripheral found in personal computer system. The common types of printers are dot matrix, inkjet and laser printer. The dot matrix printer produces its image by printing a group of dots that form the image of a character or symbol. The inkjet printer is similar to the impact dot matrix printer, instead of using the pin impact force to create an image it use ink bubble to create similar image. The inkjet printer is much lighter and quiet than the impact dot matrix printer. Today, it is the popular choice due to it characteristic and wide availability of selection. The laser printer produces its image by means of electrophotograph similar to the principle of photocopy machine. The image produced in the laser printer is much crispier than the inkjet printer due the high-resolution capability. Both the inkjet and laser printer can produce color print.

4. OPERATING SYSTEM

Operating systems is a set of control program that manages the computer's resources and creates a well-defined software environment for computer applications. Computer hardware by itself can perform little useful work. A computer requires software to be able to communicate and do useful work. The first layer of software in a computer system is the operating system. This is what starts, or boots up, the machine helps in pulling itself up by its own bootstraps and establishes a predetermined set of conditions so that applications can be run. When the computer is turned-on or the reset button is pressed, the control is pass to a set of control programs found in the ROM, a firmware store in computer chips. These programs perform several tasks: (1) to check if hardware are functioning correctly; (2) to load a set of control program from the disk to the memory; and (3) to pass control to a routine which will accept the user input. At this point, the operating system is loaded and the user can execute an application program such as MS-Word, Excel, Power Point, Access, etc.

An operating system by itself has two levels of functionality. The first level is seen by the user running the applications and utilizing system commands and utilities. At this level, each operating system has its own set of command used to accomplish frequently performed tasks such as copying files, renaming files, and formatting disks. Normally, frequently-used functions are included in the operating system as system commands. The second is at the programming level. All operating systems contain a set of pre-packaged routine that performs the "primitive" functions necessary in almost all applications. Such functions, like sending a character to the screen, reading and writing information from a disk file, and accepting input from the keyboard are common to nearly all programs. This level of functionality gives the programmer a set of standardized routines to perform this task.

5. SOFTWARE

The operating system alone renders the computer nearly useless, unless the user is capable of directly communicating to the hardware. In order to use the computer system, software is needed. Various software are available for different purposes, such as MS-Word for word processing, Excel for spreadsheet, Power Point for presentation, Access for database and Foxpro for database programming.

5.1. MS-WINDOWS

MS-Windows is the most popular operating system, it duplicates all the function performed by DOS, the defunct operating system of the seventies and eighties. The capability of MS-Window operating system far exceeds that DOS can offer it most convenient and easy to navigate. Most of the commands are represented by descriptive figures called icons. Navigating around the windows could be achieved through the use of a pointing device called mouse, normally in the desktop environment, the mouse pointer is seen as outline of an arrow or white arrow. To execute a command, the user only need to bring the mouse pointer to the desired command described by the icon and press the right button or double click the left button. The execution starts without typing any single character in the keyboard, unlike the DOS convention that needs typing a series of characters comprising the command. In windows, the computer screen is referred to as the desktop. When working, the application and documents must be in the windows. The windows on the desktop must also be arranged. If an application is left for a while, the windows are shrunk to an application icon, and still, the application keeps running on the background. When an application is shrunk, the windows place their application icon at the bottom edge of the desktop until it is again restored to window size.

With windows, several powerful applications can be run simultaneously. For example, switching from a word processing application to a spreadsheet, and then to database application with a few simple moves while quitting one application and restarting another, can easily be done.

Parts of a Windows

Each application and some documents the user choose to work on, open as separate windows. Every window has some common elements, however, not all windows use all the items.

The elements as illustrated below are the tools for working with the window and the application or document within the window.
The Control-menu box located in the upper-left corner of the window is the most useful menu when the use of a keyboard is preferred. The Control-menu commands can resize, move, maximize, minimize and close windows, and switch to Task List.

The title bar shows the name of the application or document. If more than one window is open, the title bar of the active window has a different color or intensity compared to the other title bars.

The window title, depending on the type of window it appears, can be the name of an application and the name of the document, or a placeholder. In such case, "untitled" normally appears.

The menu bar lists the available menus. Most applications have a File menu, an Edit menu, and a Help menu as well as other menus unique to the application.

The Scroll bar can move the parts of the document into view when the entire document will not fit in the window. With the bar, unseen portion of the lists and other information that is too long to fit in the allotted space can also be viewed.

The Maximize and Minimize buttons enlarge the active application window to fill the entire desktop or shrink the window to an icon.Document windows enlarge just to fill the application workspace and not the entire desktop. After enlarging the window, the Maximize button changes to a Restore button. Restore button can be used to return the window to its previous size.

The Window border is the outside edge of a window. It can lengthen or shorten each side of the border.

The Window corner can be used to shorten or lengthen two sides of a border at the same time.

The Workspace is where most of the work with an application are done. For example, the content of the documents appears in the workspace when starting a wordprocessor. Hence, an application can allow the opening of more than one document window within this workspace.

The selection cursor shows where the user is in an individual document. It marks the place in the text or graphics where the user begins typing or drawing. The arrow-shape mouse pointer appears if you have a mouse installed. It is used to indicate items the user wants to select with mouse.

Starting Applications with the Run Command

The Run command is a handy way to start applications that you want to run only occasionally or have not yet added to a group. You can open a document at the same time you start the application. Unless the program file is in your current path, you need to know the exact directory location and name of the program file before you can start the application.

1. Choose Run from the File menu in Program Manager or File Manager.
   The Run dialog box appears.
2. Type the pathname and the exact filename of the program file, including the extension if there is one.
3. If you want the application to shrink to an icon as soon as it starts, make sure the Run Minimized check box contain an X.
4. Choose OK or press ENTER.

5.2. MS-EXCEL

Excel is a spreadsheet type of software package that operates under the MS-WINDOWS operating system. The primary document in Excel is called a workbook. The workbook is similar to a ledger that stores information and each workbook is made up of sheets. The sheet is virtually divided into column and row; the column run horizontally and denoted by an alphabet starting with A and the row run vertically and denoted by number starting from 1. The intersection of column and row is called cell. The cell is the basic component of worksheet that accept different data types. The most common data types are character, number, date, logical value and formula.
