Preface

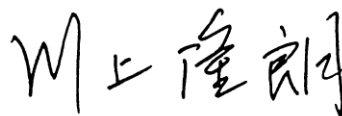

In response to a request from the Government of the Republic of Indonesia, the Government of Japan decided to conduct a Study on the Regional Educational Development and Improvement Project (REDIP) and entrusted the study to the Japan International Cooperation Agency.

JICA selected and dispatched a study team headed by Dr. Norimichi Toyomane of the International Development Center of Japan to the Republic of Indonesia between March 1999 to July 2001. In addition, JICA set up an advisory committee headed by Dr. Hiromitsu Muta, Professor of Tokyo Institute of Technology, between March 1999 and July 2001, which examined the study from specialist and technical points of view.

The team held discussions with the officials concerned of the Government of Indonesia and other stakeholders in the education sector, and conducted field surveys and a pilot project at the study area. Upon returning to Japan, the team prepared this final report. I hope that this report will contribute to the further development of lower secondary education in the Republic of Indonesia.

Finally, I wish to express my sincere appreciation to the officials concerned of the Government of Indonesia for their close cooperation extended to the study.

INTRODUCTION

The Study on Regional Educational Development and Improvement Project (REDIP) was implemented since March 1999 as a two and half year project with the cooperation of the Government of Indonesia, namely the Office of Research and Development, the Ministry of National Education (MONE) and the Japan International Cooperation Agency (JICA).

Since Indonesia has largely achieved universal primary education, the government set junior secondary education as the next target at which to aim. Despite the respectable figures of increased enrollment in Junior Secondary Education, it is commonly acknowledged that quality of education lags behind. It is also a serious concern that hidden under the aggregate figures there are wide disparities among regions in various ways. Considering Indonesia's vast diversity in ethnic composition, culture, religion, geographic and economic conditions, it would not be very surprising if nationwide drives or programs bring uneven results over the territory and across the communities. To make things harder, until now, the system of educational administration in Indonesia has been a highly centralized one, leaving little room for local or school initiatives or adaptation to local conditions.

Against this backdrop and out of the impending concern, REDIP started with the following objectives: in the short run, it should devise effective actions to arrest falling enrollment by the recent economic crises, in a close conjunction with on-going programs; in the med- to long-term, it should develop a province-wide plan to expand and improve junior secondary education and implement some priority measures or actions on a trial basis. Emphasis has been placed on the capacity building of local education administrations as well as local communities and schools in the setting of administrative decentralization. This officially started in January 2001. Specifically, REDIP has formulated measures to encourage school-based management with community participation and field-tested them in 15 kecamatan within 7 kabupaten/kota in Central Java and North Sulawesi. In total 154 experimental schools participated. The various pilots were implemented for one year, and then evaluated with respect to their particular effects on the intended targets.

In order to achieve the above objectives, REDIP created the major activities described in Figure 1, following the time schedule listed in Figure 2.

Six types of pilots were identified (Component A and five Menus in Component B) after conducting a comprehensive survey. They are as follows:

1. Component A: Kecamatan SLTP Development Team (TPK). Built around the concepts developed under COPLANER and COPSEP, the TPK was created to improve awareness and participation of the community, government and school stakeholders in improving some aspects of educational quality. A second purpose was to mobilize the potential of the community by securing donated resources, volunteers and revenue.
2. Component B, Menu 1: KKKS. The purpose of this was to provide principals with a variety of skills to improve their leadership capabilities as well as to build the capacity of the KKKS organizational structure, a possible key to improving professionalism.
3. Component B, Menu 2: MGMP. The purpose of this pilot was to improve teacher pedagogical skills and to build the capacity of the MGMP organizational structure so that it can serve the professional development needs of the teacher.

4. Component B, Menu 3: Textbook. The purpose of this was to provide stakeholders with classroom-based resources to increase learning.
5. Component B, Menu 4: BP3. The purpose of this pilot was to increase and broaden the role of parents participating in BP3 in ways other than raising revenues as well as to build the institutional capacity of the BP3 organization.
6. Component B, Menu 5: Block Grant. The purpose of this was to provide financial resources for use stakeholders to improve some aspects of the school that would have a positive impact on quality.

The pilot program model was structured in such a way as to build closer working relationships among six stakeholder groups – students, teachers, principals, parents, community members and government officials. It also aimed at building the capacity of existing organizational structures such as KKKS, MGMP and BP3. The creation of TPK was necessary since no such organization existed at the kecamatan level. By configuring the pilots as is shown, it was possible to have a multi-tiered impact on education from the kecamatan to the classroom-level.

REDIP experiments and their interim results are already attracting attention from government officials as well as other donors. For instance, the Asian Development Bank has designed one new project in Indonesia relying partly on REDIP experiments and their results. The World Bank, on the other hand, has made it clear that it would back REDIP once some donor have decided to implement it on a larger scale. Another notable instance of REDIP contribution is its Working Paper VIII on Indonesia's legal structure with regard to education. This is being closely studied by the "edform," an official working group in MONE newly created to draft a new Education Law of Indonesia due late this year.

This Final Report is a compilation of all the studies and analysis conducted during the period from April 1999 to June 2001 under REDIP. It consists of three parts: Part I is a description of the situation analysis of junior secondary education in Indonesia, most of which were conducted in the early 1999; Part II describes REDIP Pilot Project. All of the project cycle from the preparation to evaluation is described, such as how the pilots were designed, how they were implemented, and how they were evaluated; Part III discusses the strategies to be taken after REDIP such as why a Post-REDIP Project is necessary, how it should be designed and implemented, and how its economic and social feasibility is assessed. It is hoped that this report will become a solid basis for a new project to be formulated and implemented in the mold of REDIP, an experimental project that has demonstrated that the model can work in Indonesia.
